If you wear that old suit much longer. It looks so worn and shabby and has no more style about it than a cord of wood. You would not be a bad looking fellow at all if you wore one of

Time was when men wore clothes to cover their nakedness. They wear them now to be fashionable. That restless, evanescent unknown quantity, STYLE, when shown in the cut of a coat makes men distinguished.

BUTCHERS WELCOMED

In Words of Eloquence by the Mayor and Others.

THE NINTH ANNUAL CONVENTION

Of the American Butchers' Protective Association Opens in this City with a Large Attendance, Representing Many States—The Admission of Wholesalers Left to Local Associations—The New Constitution.

The Butchers' National Protective Association of the United States began its ninth annual session in this city yesterday morning. At 9 o'clock the members of the Wheeling Association and delegates, headed by the Opera House band, marched through the principal streets, thence to Butchers' hall, on Chapline street. The hall was tastefully decorated, and sweet-scented, blooming bouquets added their fragrance to the occasion.

President Samuel Ochsenbein, of the Wheeling association, called the meeting to order, after which prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. Riker. President Ochsenbein then made a rattling address of welcome, in which he contrasted the social standing of the American and foreign butchers. "In some foreign countries," said he, "butchers are not allowed a place in church, and are disbarred from courts of justice. In free America this is wiped away, and therefore we may be proud that we are American citizens. We have butchers who are church men, and who love God and are trying to live so as to meet those gods before."

The butchers as a class are charitable, and you will find that where a society needs assistance the butchers are the first ones asked to donate. We have not only our own welfare to consider in coming here, but it is for the self protection of our children that follow us. If the policy of the "Big Four" dominates, it will not be twenty years before there will be no butchers, only cutters. It is also for the benefit of our citizens that we are banded together, for if the "Big Four" succeeds, they will have to pay more for their meats, as they do in Chicago. The city fathers desire the slaughter houses banished, because they are nuisances, but allow livery stables to flourish in the heart of the city. Let us then go to work and do something whereby we can hold our own and be free men.

MAYOR CALDWELL SPEAKS.

President Ochsenbein next introduced His Honor Mayor B. F. Caldwell, who spoke as follows:

GENTLEMEN OF THE BUTCHERS' PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:—It is with the greatest pleasure that I greet you on this what might justly call a Red Letter Day in the history of Wheeling. Truly a fortunate and one of the most important ones to one of our great industries. Our city, I am sure, will appreciate the importance of the event, and the sentiment of our city, members of your organization here, will take a just pride in having you as their guests.

I feel sure that they are happy to be able to greet you with that true West Virginia hospitality, and especially is this true of the butchers, for they always go the whole hog or none. Our city, while not large, containing about forty thousand people, all well and hearty, all live well and enjoy life and are credited with knowing a good thing when they see it, hence the butchers are at all times the men they desire to see, especially if he is a member of the Butchers' Protective Association.

I will try to tell each of you as are not familiar with our place, something of what we have and what has made us rich and prosperous. I mean the butchers are rich, and I trust that before you leave us you will feel that they are able to treat you royally.

Our is a peculiarly situated town, hemmed in on the one side by great hills that for generations have been a source of wealth to our people, enabling them to have a coal mine at their back door; indeed, this is literally true as to some of our great hills, which for many years have dumped the coal direct from the mine at the furnace door. Then at our other side we have the Ohio river, La Belle river, beautiful river. Unlike the wheels of commerce, it cannot be restrained by any combination of men, but does on forever, doing its duty to the land, and bearing on its surface the labor of all and free of cost, and to our whole country is a great source of wealth. Our city is situated on that beautiful river is that it is a little nearer when on a high.

Our city is narrow, but what we lack in width we make up in length, for we have a street about five miles or more, and our greater wheeling of the near future will make it double that.

Our industries include about all the products of iron, pottery and glass, with all the usual mechanical industries, also at least one large packing house that will compare favorably with any in the country. I had intended to tell you more of our city, but our friend Schuchert, of the Butchers' and Packers' Magazine, has robbed me of about all I intended to say, so that for further particulars I take pleasure in referring you to that most excellent publication of June 1, and may its subscription list never grow less, but may it increase as long as it continues to defend the interests of the Butchers' Protective Association.

Indeed, I was surprised to learn you had such a valuable publication as the Butchers' and Packers' Magazine, and from what we have seen and know of its editor, Mr. Schuchert, since his sojourn here, I think we will all agree that your interests are in safe hands.

Nature has indeed been liberal with us; these hills of coal are sources of wealth without end, and furnish the most magnificent views, some of which you will have an opportunity of seeing. They are also predictive of all that goes to make farming desirable. We have hills and cattle on a thousand hills, and good cattle, long horn, short horn and no horn, as you like it, and these are what we eat.

Our butchers all have choice cuts, and but little bone in the cut. I am informed that owing to some complaint about so much bone that they are about to experiment with the view of producing beef without the bone, and I will say right here that what they cannot do is hardly worth doing, so we may look for success. If no bone, certainly there will be no bone of contention in the ranks of the association.

I believe in your organization for it encourages the retailer or the small dealer. I believe in private enterprise that will give all its industrious man a chance to make an honest living. I am utterly opposed to these overgrown corporations, that crush out the small business and claim that it is the survival of the fittest; it is a false theory. In your organization lies your strength; if you are banded together to advance the interests of the meat your cause is just and will certainly prevail, for in union there is strength.

And now, gentlemen of the Butchers' Protective Association of the United States, in behalf of the city of Wheeling, I extend to you a cordial welcome, the keys of the city, we have none, the gates are open wide, the city is yours, paint it any color you wish, but I would suggest that it be red; yes, a blood red!

CAPT. R. B. DOVERSEN was next introduced, and on behalf of the Wheeling association, extended a cordial welcome to the visiting delegates. He referred to the historic spot on which Wheeling is situated and he hoped that the present meeting would be of the kind and character that would always be a green spot in the memory. He also paid a deserved tribute to the generosity and enterprise of the German element, which forms 33 per cent of the population.

Vice President Conrad Klingelhoefer, in the absence of President D. J. Shaw, called the convention to order, and the reports of the president, secretary and treasurer were read and referred to the finance committee, consisting of William Akin, Jr., Nicholas Lee and Gustav H. Medick. The report showed that new charters had been issued to associations in Sioux City, Iowa; Watertown, N. Y.; Kansas City, Mo.; Dallas, Texas, and Buffalo, N. Y. The financial condition of the National Association also showed improvement over a year ago.

President Shaw, being announced, the members formed in two lines and gave him a rousing reception as he entered the hall. President Elbert S. Adams, of the Connecticut association, proposed "three cheers," which were given with a will.

President D. J. Shaw then appointed as committee on credentials, Henry Dandist, W. H. Glassmeyer and Gottlieb Heller.

THE AFTERNOON SESSION was mainly given to reports of committees, notably the policy committee, who reported new constitution and by-laws to govern the new consolidation if effected. This convention is a working one and the proposed constitution is being adopted by sections. The clause regarding the extension of wholesalers, as outlined in the INTELLIGENCER yesterday, did not pass, but a substitute resolution proposed by William M. Akin, Jr., of Evansville, Ind., did pass, which leaves the matter of accepting or rejecting wholesalers in the control of the local associations, subject of
